Is the table given above in normalized form? If not, then which normal form (NF) is violated?

- A. The table is in normal form, as each cell contains only one value.
- B. 2NF
- C. 1NF

D. 3NF

Answer: B,D

Explanation:

andThe table given above violates 2NF, as TaskID and TaskName are not functionally dependent on the primary key attribute, i.e. ProjectID. TaskID functionally determines TaskName. Therefore, in order to make it in 2NF, you should split the parent table Project and create a table named Task with TaskID as the primary key attribute and migrate ProjectID to the Task table as the foreign key. The table is not in 2NF. Therefore, it is also not in 3NF. Answer C is incorrect. The table is in 1NF, as each row contains atomic values, i.e. each cell contains a single value.
